Title: "Russian Studies Go Digital"

Description: In recent years, the rise of a wide range of digital methodologies has begun to fundamentally change Russian studies, an interdisciplinary field concerned with all aspects of Russian history and contemporary society. Also in Aleksanteri Institute at the University of Helsinki this shift is visible, as increasing number of projects seeks to increase our knowledge of digital transformations in Russia and increasing number of researchers use digital environmental as their research sight and big data methods as a part of their methodological tool-box. This presentation will familiarize the conference participants with the state of digital research in Aleksanteri Institute and its collaborative projects.
